

Irrelevant Beliefs

Our “on the street politico reporter” Alphonse Jurai shares an interview. We herein share the conversation with Alphonse in this one of a kind interview.

Alphonse said, we are interviewing people with names that sort of remind you of people running for office.

This guy is NOT running for office, but when asked what his platform would be he replied:

"My name?", said the man on the street. "What my platform would be? Yes , yes" he replied... I will share this.

My name is.. Bacon Salami...

I believe sandwiches are made with two pieces of bread ...

I believe peanut butter is peanut butter but jelly is different

I believe the sunrise is a perpendicular event based on reality not theory.

I believe that buildings are made of walls, not roofs, or else they would be huts.

I believe that "pizza hut" should be called Pizza Building based on this one reason alone.

I believe that licenses are made to be revoked and that this event should happen randomly just to keep people guessing and to finally answer the question.. " why me?"

The answer being... it could happen to everyone.

I believe the lottery is rigged.. and that Europeans are paid fifty dollars to stand still with a five foot long cardboard checks to keep American gamblers happy.

I believe that Kars are not for Kids. Or else you could drive underage.

I believe it's wrong to sell sharp knives on TV. Demonstrating impossible watermelon cutting techniques better left for the imagination.

I believe that being online is the only thing that matters and that you should now text at least six feet apart.

I believe that because Maine is called vacation land, that NH should change its logo to "the safety state"... That way people can get to Maine safely. If you see something in NH.. please... say something...no one else has seen anything in NH for years..

I believe that being vague and unassuming is better than being Wrong!

I believe wages are for poor people who have to work and should not interfere with big business decisions..i.e ..minimum wage..yuk!@!@

I believe that computers are our future and because they are already here the future is irrelevant. IRRELEVANT!!!

KEEP REPEATING that word and you have our new campaign slogan down pat.

Thank you for the opportunity to share my beliefs, Bacon Salami here and yes.. I'm now running for president even though its irrelevant.
