

Still Colonies

Is America a political occupation? It seems so, both in extraordinary example and by population. Being a nation of laws we resist the domination of foreign interests, but only politically. We resist the notion of a population with no rights ..but only politically... because legally you really don't have any..not really. YOU have due process, at best.

Land ownership is by title not political entitlement, lest perhaps its Downing Street in England or other politically based residences abroad and local. The governors house for example.....

The kings grant is truly the only right to tax free ownership of land. And of course the position of governor was by the kings own hand. So part and parcel the taxes are due, not to a running public debt but as matter of rank and privilege..to the king. We assume liability here and maintain that the war against taxation without representation was waged as a consequence of not being represented in royal court.

So nowhear ye hear ye.....the court of England welcomes the newly appointed representative to his majesty's court to prevail to his wisdom and mercies concerning taxation.

But the land..is..still...His.

So until further notice all mortgage payments are hereby suspended until such time as the new representative has time to pursue your personal interests to the king in this matter. Which I don't..have time.. so simply stop paying mortgages and property taxes today as the land belongs to the king and resume your lives as free Englishman.

Signed

Your personal representative to the royal court of England!
