

Just say NO

Breaking commentary by Viva Kittery's very own commentary specialist Moray Eale, has new take on "Yes, Virginia there is a Santa Clause" .. in reference to taking a day off.

Moray was in rogue fashion discussing the possibility of the idea of a "day off" and why ultimately a day off is an outrageous break from the American work ethic.

Who really gets a day off.? Moray injected and then explained... its simply a way of denying the principles of suffering. Does Santa Clause himself, the giver of good cheer and hopeful promises take a day off? NO! He manages millions of hungry elves all year and then does a "double" to get the toys out and about on the only day everyone else is resting and celebrating!

Santa Clause is a mix of human resource director and managerial expertise.. keeping the kids, "staff" .. in line... while managing the productivity that allows for billions of dollars to flow in an endless cycle of bounty to our wits end. Moray continued, "I personally find myself siding with the Ebenezer effect here he demands the worker to stay until midnight on Christmas Eve so that not a penny be out of place or unaccounted for at days end. This notion of "leaving early" for "family" time is an outrage and it only succeeds in one thing.. it takes the "ING" out of suffering and leaves you to simply suffer! See what I mean Moray tooted. You take the "ING" Out of things and you are left with the base principle you were originally meant for.

The faces in his listening crowd had turned rather pale..children were shifting on their parents laps with tears running down their faces as they heard that life is only meant to work relentlessly hard and that any break from suffering would only mean that you are left to suffer. Moray himself seemed charged with enthusiasm as he went to to ask... “what's in your wallet???” and pulled out his no limit-cap spending card.

He said.. I have a government approved no limit-cap spending card because you all elected me he exclaimed. But you have a real credit card with 16 percent interest that you have to pay on for eternity to get toilet paper that you need today but cant afford until next week. And he added..oddly enough that's a great reason to be at work and enjoy free toilet paper and running water instead of being at home “relaxing” on some kind “day off”.

Then he was sort of screaming into the microphone as he exclaimed..see what I mean!

Apparently the audience did see what he meant and they were shuffling out in droves; almost stampeding as the auditorium became empty. GO AHEAD and Run Moray continued... Run from hard work and suffering... but realize that in the end you are only going to suffer!

He was laughing maniacally as he polished his personal no limit-cap spending credit card with no real payment due. You will, he muttered under his breath...hmmph!!
