

Safety First

To deviate from what is standard normal or expected is called an anomaly.

The new director of safety has recently declared that anomalestic actions or anomalies are Not Safe..

Director Flemly Status has put his foot down on this one! He has decided that anything that deviates from the norm is probably, if not conclusively "unsafe"..

Look out Christmas..where the entire day is based on unsafe surprises. Gifts are anomalies in their own way Flem stated.

For instance he said.. if you were to get a red ranger auto load bb gun you would probably shoot your eye out!

Or if you got a pair of new skates you would probably end up o thin ice and Drown! Ain't we all on thin ice these days he added with a chuckle!

Or if you got candy, you could even possibly become a diabetic! See, Flem continued.. as the list goes on and on... so do " safety issues!!

He said even if you got everything you wanted you would probably need a new house and end up in a car accident while moving to your new home. Basically, Flem continued there is no way around safety!!

FLEMS answer to the Christmas safety issues are as follows.

He states..is it safe for Santa to land on the roof of your house!@
OMG he stammered.. possibly slipping and falling!! The director has issued a safety standard report being now delivered to the North pole.

In it states.. "we don't care about the rest of the world " , but here in America we are demanding an anomaly free Christmas..with no surprises!! But we will still celebrate Christmas online with presents delivered as pictures only. Because in reality all you do is send pictures of things you got anyway.

So now you can give the children pictures of anything they ask and they can share their Christmas..safely..online..with no probability of unsafe outcomes!!

Merry Christmas Santa!!.. and you are receiving a new Super Computer to send all those pics out on Christmas eve.

Light applause was given as Flem read the statement to the 400,000 safety board committee members and light rumblings among the crowd wondering what photos Santa might send them for Christmas..
